

Mawer Global Balanced Fund, Series A

Q1 2023 | Performance Commentary

Market overview

Equity markets were resilient in the first quarter of 2023 finishing with a strong positive return despite ongoing recession risks. Markets benefitted from a combination of factors including inflation falling in some regions, the anticipation by market participants that the U.S. Federal Reserve may be nearing the end of its rate hike cycle, and reduced fears of a hard landing for the economy. At the same time, corporate earnings have been quite resilient. In Canada, inflation continued to ease, and the Bank of Canada paused further hikes to allow the impacts of previous tightening to make their way through the economy. Canadian bonds also finished in positive territory as yields fell across the curve. That said, the market's advance was far from a straight line. Both equities and bonds experienced volatility, especially in connection to the bank collapses in the U.S. and Europe which sent reverberations across the world. While the possibility of further instability remains, swift intervention seemed to have restored confidence and prevented contagion across the broader banking industry.

Performance commentary

After a challenging year in 2022, balanced investors benefitted from a rise in equity markets and Canadian bonds in the quarter. The portfolio modestly outperformed the blended benchmark in the quarter, driven by the relative outperformance of the portfolio's global equity holdings.

Reflecting the broad nature of the market's advance, most equity holdings delivered positive returns. Security selection in the industrial and consumer discretionary sectors were the biggest drivers of positive outperformance for the portfolio's equity holdings. Two of our top performers were critical professional service data providers RELX and Wolters Kluwer. The products and services offered by both firms are deeply embedded in their customers' businesses and typically represent a small portion of their cost structure—a highly attractive dynamic. Both companies reported strong organic revenue growth and underlying operating profit growth for fiscal 2022.

Another industrial company, FedEx, reported good quarterly results relative to expectations lifting the stock price higher in the quarter. FedEx greatly benefited from a spike in parcel volumes post COVID but as growth rates moderate, it continues to focus on improving operational efficiency. The company is lowering its capital intensity with an efficiency over growth posture and a focus on return on invested capital, in other words continuing to ensure a sharp focus on wealth creation. On the other side of the COVID consumer demand shock, Booking Holdings benefited from room bookings surpassing 2019 levels in the fourth quarter by 10% with all major regions above pre-pandemic levels. It also continued gaining market share in the U.S. where it has historically under-indexed. The business model is asset-light (somewhat unique amongst consumer discretionary businesses) and generates a lot of free cash flow, which is sensibly allocated to buy back shares.

Given the outsized positive returns of many technology-oriented companies after a rough 2022, for this rate sensitive group it's not surprising some of our top performers in the portfolio were Microsoft, Amazon, and Alphabet. However, our meaningful net underweight to technology was the main detractor of relative performance for the portfolio's equity holdings. In a similar vein, though in the opposite market direction, several of our health care holdings gave back some of last years gains despite continued positive data in their underlying businesses. Moderna released interim data on its Phase III flu candidate which had good results against Influenza A strains (responsible for 95% of influenza-related hospitalization in adults). Organon saw strong growth in its key contraceptive asset and biosimilar franchise though its fertility portfolio was hampered by COVID in China. However, demand is recovering and could be a positive tailwind in 2023.

Looking ahead

We have often noted that one of the major risks facing markets is if something breaks when major macroeconomic variables shift quickly. And indeed, after one of the fastest periods of policy interest rate hikes by central banks, some less well-managed banks in the U.S. and Europe needed to be rescued. The possibility of further instability remains, although for now confidence in the banking system appears to be restored.

A high level of uncertainty remains not only with how high the U.S. Federal Reserve will go with the federal funds rate, but also how long it remains elevated. The tightening of credit as a result of U.S. regional bank turmoil may impact economic activity, and while a pause by the U.S. Federal Reserve may be near, challenges abating U.S. inflation partially caused by a tight employment market may require rates to stay higher. There is also often a lag between monetary policy and the resulting economic impact. We are not trying to predict the next move for policy makers, but rather ensuring our portfolio is resiliently positioned for a variety of scenarios.

With uncertainty as to the path forward, there are bound to be other unanticipated surprises on the horizon. Even the strongest businesses have vulnerabilities that can be exposed by the right trigger. This is why we tend to emphasize non-predictive decision making that focuses on steering away from areas where those vulnerabilities are sharpest as opposed to forecasting specific events. This requires a disciplined investment process, a culture in which different points of view are celebrated, and appropriate diversification that builds natural contradictions into the portfolios. And even though this "boring" approach may sacrifice possible short-term gains in certain market environments, we believe it should lead to better and more consistent outcomes over time.

As we often say it is difficult to predict when the tides will change for the better or for the worse. That is why we prepare, rather than predict.
